> Devlin is a notorious character well known against Devlin, whom she charged with being a notorious burglar and highway robber. She stated that she was his mistress, and that at various times he had communicated to her an account of the felonies he had committed. She even gave the names of persons whose places Devlin had burglariously entered, and the very time the outrages were committed, all of which was corroborated by reliable witnessess. He was tried and convicted, but judgment was suspended by some mysterious influence. He had no sooner reresidence of his old mistress and asked why she appeared as a witness against him, but from his pocket, and pointing it toward her, was about to take her life, when the young woman's mother jumped between, and the girl fled to the street. In a small memorandum book belonging I INVITE CITIZENS and strangers to call to Dorsett was the following verse written in JAPAN. Recent advices from Japan, furnished by the ship-of-war Portsmouth, which visited that country in October last, go to strengthen the idea that Commodore Pery's treaty will spectfully invite public attention to my large stock of FURNITURE, which I am constantly in pect of trade with the Japanese, as they have their advantage to give me a call as the range of very little to sell, and little disposition to take my GOODS in respect to quality and price, is anything in payment, but silver. Hitherto there has been great difficulty in obtaining fresh beef there, as the ox is regarded by the Japanese as a sacred animal and is not killed for food. Measures, however, have recently been taken by the authorities to furnish the ships with fat cattle. Fish, (a leading article of diet with the Japanese) poultry and vegetables are said to be abundant. The harbor is a fine one; in fact, the best on the whole Asiatic coast. It is also stated that coal is mined abundantly in the vicinity; so that, should the steam navigation hetween San Francisco and China be revived this barbor may form a coaling depot. To secure accommodations of this sort, it will be recollected, was one of the chief objects of Commodore Perry's expedition. The pen ding operations of England against China may, indeed, tend to arouse the fears and jealousy of the Japanese, but they may also have the effect of suggesting to them the wis-
